2. Significance of Liberalization in Computer and Related Services

In recent years, the computer and related services sector has experienced enormous growth and has become one of the central driving forces in the development of a knowledge-based economy. Computer and related services represent a fundamental sector for economic activity. These services are frequently considered as a tool for economic development because of their role in building infrastructure. Moreover, the rapid growth of the computer services sector market has led to employment creation in both developing and developed countries. Finally, the liberalization of this sector helps economies to expand existing market activities and to develop new export market.

In order to promote effective liberalization in this sector, considering the rapid technological advancement and possibilities for creation of new business model, we urge requested Members to schedule commitments at the highest level possible (i.e. two digit CPC 84). Full commitments at the highest level will ensure the openness of this sector to the benefit of all Members making such commitments and further ensure that developments in this area remain robust and dynamic.
